

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Slits and holes within a reticle for a local interconnect layer (LIL) are sized according to factors such as relative isolation and whether they are large or small. This helps overcome side-lobing and other undesirable effects of interference.